In our lists of perfumes that made 2021 so interesting, there is one that defied classification. I'm thinking of the new(er) release from the intriguing French fashion and home

But what is it like in a perfume? Some rather famous perfumes include it, such as Dior's Hypnotic Poison, Kenzo's Jungle L'Elephant, and Mugler's Angel, so it's certainly not unheard of. Looking across the different profiles of these fragrances, it's often used to accentuate vanilla, licorice accords, or something a bit sweeter like caramel. It also has the ability to run with the deeper, sweeter notes like cumin and animalics like civet and castoreum. So clearly, the dose of such a spice means a great deal. A small amount adds a fascinating bit of savory detail to a rich, coarse
